Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Thursday 14 Jan 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Cold in east and north, snow in places. Southwest mild.

Today:
Many northern, eastern and central areas, cold with a mix of rain, sleet and snow, heavy in places, causing some disruption to travel, especially across higher ground. Rain more likely near coasts, while southwestern areas milder until evening, and windy.

Tonight:
Rain and snow easing, though slower to clear the far northeast of Scotland. Otherwise a mix of low cloud, freezing fog and some clear spells. Frost and ice potential hazards.

Friday:
A largely dry but chilly day for most, areas of low cloud and fog slow to clear, especially in some eastern parts. Slightly milder and breezier later in far west.

Outlook for Saturday to Monday:
Rain and strong winds spreading east on Saturday, with risk of snow in the north and east, clearing to sunny/clear spells and coastal showers. Turning unsettled later Monday. Mainly cold.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.